SWEET SUMMER.

The spring has fled with its shine and shower The summer reigns, in the radiant hour, When noon burns sweetness from every flower. That turns his face to the sun. She reigns in the waning blue of the skles. When the level light of late evening lies On pastures golden with memories Of dear dreams, over and done.

O summer, sweet summer, when lovers stray
Past the green mill-peel by the shady way.
Through the fields soft-weathed in the newmown hay,
And down through the leafy lane;
When the young dream dream, and the old folks stand folks stand And look out over the quiet land. And sigh (not sadly, if hand clasps hand) That youth comes never again!

For the summer dies—as our youth must die—And vain are the prayer and the passionate err.

The roses and beautiful days go by
With all their wonder and worth;
And snows are over the lift's head,
And a sheet of lice on the rose's bed,
And love may die, now the loaves are doad,
And winter is lord of the earth,

Yet listen, sad heart, to the glad refrain
Of the brown-winged birds in the brownhedged lane;
Summer bas gone, but she comes again!
Sweet summer never can die.
And youth, sweet youth, is immortal too.
And will bloom again as the roses do.
And love is eternal—if hearts be true—
Though youth and the rose go by.
